this paper reexamines both monthly and quarterly u s postwar data to investigate if the observed comovements between money real interest rates prices and output are compatible with the money real interest output link suggested by existing monetary theories of output which include both keynesian and equilibrium models the major empirical findings are these 1 in both monthly and quarterly data we cannot reject the hypothesis that the ex ante real rate is exogenous or granger causally prior in the context of a four variable system which contains money prices nominal interest rates and industrial production 2 in quarterly data there is significantly more information contained in either the levels of expected inflation or the innovation of this variable for predicting future output given current and lagged output than in any other variable examined money actual inflation nominal interest rates or ex ante real rates the effect of an inflation innovation on future output is unambiguously negative the first result casts strong doubt on the empirical importance of existing monetary theories of output which imply that money should have a causal role on the ex ante real rates the second result would appear incompatible with most demand driven models of output in light of these results we propose an alternative structural model which can account for the major dynamic interactions among the variables this model has two central features i output is unaffected by money supply and ii the money supply process is motivated by short run price stability geopolitically as a major oil supplier to the world's markets but also as a bellwether for the health of Africa. The 2007 elections have demonstrated that the concerns addressed in Kenneth Omeje's important book State-Society Relations in Nigeria speak to the political transitions under way across the continent and the sorts of challenges that emerge in the interstices of neoliberal reform, resource dependency, and a vibrant polity in which new civic organizations are hitting their stride. A timely and pathbreaking volume. Prof. Michael Watts, Director of the Centre for African Studies, University of California, Berkeley, USA. Kenneth Omeje and his co-authors must be congratulated for their presentation of a wealth of new material in this synthetic, concisely written, and well-informed survey of a key period in Nigeria's post-colonial history. A much-needed and convincingly argued contribution to the disentanglement of rhetoric from reality under the Obasanjo presidency. Prof. Daniel Bach, Centre for African Studies, Institut d'Études Politiques, University of Bordeaux, France.

By applying an analytical framework to the patient, stepped-out development of models, Mishkin draws students into a deeper understanding of modern monetary theory, banking, and policy. His combination of common-sense applications with current events provides comprehensive coverage in an informal tone students appreciate.
